Master Serie – Google Bubble No.1 - Bubble That Knew Too Much"

Short pitch (EN)

"Google Bubble No-1" is a tech-satire comedy series based on absurd but real events from the digital world.
The story follows a website owner whose analytics suddenly collapse into chaos — one system shows normal traffic, another shows nothing, and Google Analytics insists on reporting a single lonely visit.

As he tries to understand what's happening, the series cuts between his real world and a fictionalized Google Analytics headquarters in Ireland, where analysts panic, managers overreact, and the Legal Department rules with iron logic and zero transparency.

The show blends real digital frustrations with absurd corporate humor, creating a parallel universe where every analytics tool lives in its own reality and everyone pretends they're right. It's The Office meets Silicon Valley, told through the lens of someone who just wanted his website to load faster — and accidentally triggered a corporate meltdown.

Tone: fast, witty, meta, grounded in true events
Format: 30-minute single-camera comedy
Core theme: The digital world isn't evil or smart — it's just comically inconsistent.
